

China's homegrown C919 jet completes maiden flight

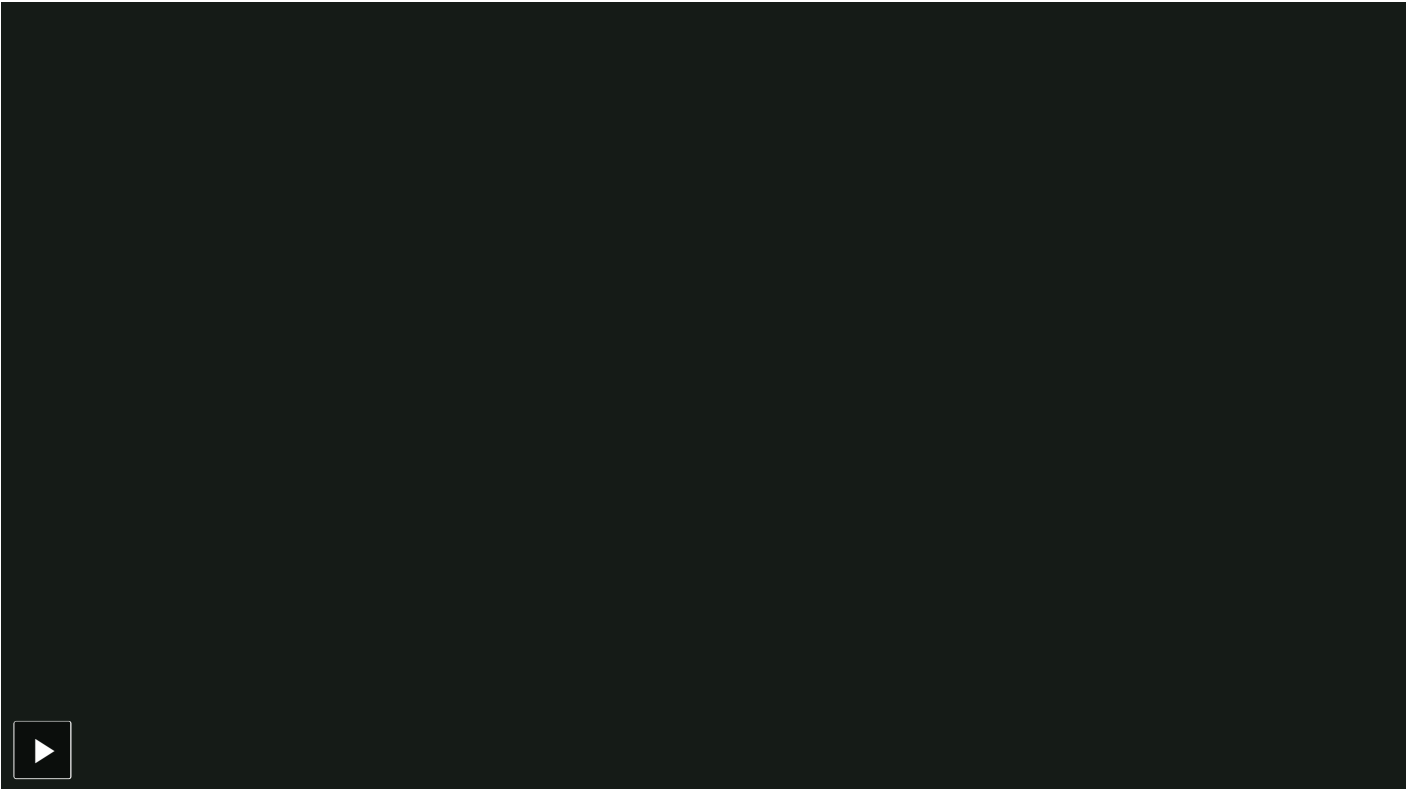

C919 is seen as a powerful symbol of China's global ambitions in the aviation market

© Fri, May 5, 2017, 14:13

Clifford Coonan in Beijing

Video

Images

The C919, China's first domestically built large passenger jet, takes to the skies as China takes its first steps into competing in global aviation. Video: CCTV

China's homegrown C919 passenger jet completed its maiden flight on Friday, hailed as a triumph of the country's soaring engineering prowess and a sign of Beijing's ambition to compete in global aviation.

Reports on the C919 narrowbody emphasised the symbolic significance of the name. The "C" in the aircraft's name stands for both China and COMAC (Commercial Aircraft Corp of China), the number 9 is a symbol for "everlasting", while the 19 represents the aircraft's maximum seat capacity of 190.

"The flight makes China the fourth jumbo jet producer after the United States, Europe and Russia, " the Xinhua news agency reported after the C919 flew north over the Yangtze River delta, performed various manoeuvres before returning south along the coast. The agency said the plane flew at about 3,000m and at speeds of 290-300 km/h.

The government hopes the C919 will prove a major competitor for aviation giants Boeing and Airbus, specifically the Boeing 737 and Airbus A320. It is expected to begin commercial operations with airlines by 2020.

National triumph

The maiden flight was trumpeted as a national triumph in the Chinese media, coming just days after China launched its first domestically-built aircraft carrier. The Communist Party is keen that China's growing economic muscle should be matched by broader improvements in science and technology, and recent years have seen other major achievements for China, such as significant advances in its space programme.

After achieving economic growth from low-end manufacturing, the government is pushing a new "Made in China 2025" agenda that aims to make China's domestic output more sophisticated with high added value in areas such as robotics, biotechnology and aviation.

After about 90 minutes in the air the aircraft landed safely back at Pudong airport in Shanghai.

Local tech

While acknowledging the input of 16 international concerns such as GE and Honeywell, the reports stressed how much of the technology that went into the C919 was local.

Zhou Guirong, the aircraft's deputy chief designer, told the Global Times newspaper that the overall localisation rate of the C919 aircraft could reach over 50 per cent.

ADVERTISEMENT

COMAC said 23 foreign and domestic airlines, including the flag Air China and leasing company GE Capital Aviation Service, have placed orders for 570 aircraft.

Xinhua quoted Michel Merluzeau, director of the aerospace and defence analysis group AirInsight Research, as saying that the next challenge would be for the C919 to get Western certification, including European Aviation Safety Agency and Federal Aviation Administration certification. "If achieved, I think it will greatly enhance the accessible market of C919," said Mr Merluzeau.

Test pilot Cai Jun, a former China Eastern Airlines pilot, said he had full confidence in the aircraft. "I feel quite proud to pilot the C919 in my hometown of Shanghai," he told the Shanghai Daily.

Topics:

Zhou Guirong

Michel Merluzeau

Cai Jun

Communist Party

European Aviation Safety Agency

READ MORE

- » Conservatives cruising to landslide victory in local voting in UK
- » On trade, Canada and Ireland need all the friends they can get
- » North Korea accuses CIA of plot to kill Kim Jong-un
- ⌚ French election: Macron lead grows ahead of Sunday vote
- ⌚ Obamacare is 'dead' says Trump after house passes health bill

Truth matters. For news you can trust. Subscribe.

MORE FROM THE IRISH TIMES

Irish News

Day report says State employees should contribute more to pensions

Opinion

Michael O'Toole: State has taken a bizarre trip back to the 1950s

Soccer

Changed days for fortunate few when it comes to being shown the door

Politics

Parliamentary vote row prompts pledge to notify Ministers in advance

MORE IN SPONSORED

The Story of Home: A dream of tiny houses

The Story of Home: Light and shade

'I'm still taking it 20 years on and loving it'

The Story of Home: 'People need a sense of belonging'

ADVERTISEMENT

Latest World

Jakarta's Christian governor jailed for blasphemy against Islam

45 mins

Ukraine police arrest dozens at tense Victory Day events

47 mins

Ancient human-relative fossils earlier vintage than first thought

2 hours

Three people dead after avalanche in French Alps

2 hours

Centre-left candidate set for clear win in South Korean election

2 hours

ADVERTISEMENT

Most Read in News

- 1 Pay report says State employees should contribute more to pensions
- 2 Dublin ice cream parlour among four food firms closed in April
- 3 Six TDs refuse to stand for Dáil prayer and reflection
- 4 Vulture fund dodges rent laws 'by charging extra for hot water'
- 5 Testimony of Nóirín O'Sullivan to Dáil committee contradicted

Never miss a story.

SUBSCRIBE

Trump presidency

The man, the administration and the fallout worldwide

Brexit

What happens now and what does it mean for Ireland? Full coverage here

Terror attacks

Read more on terror strikes throughout Europe and the world

Migrant Crisis

European unity falters in the face of refugee crisis

Features & Opinion »

UK election: Corbyn does his best to shift focus from Brexit

UK | Denis Staunton

'Monsieur Zen is fine,' says Labour leader in face of onslaught of media criticism

The smuggling game: Playing with life and death to reach Europe

Europe

Millions fleeing conflict and poverty gamble their futures and savings with people smugglers

Macron's victory greeted with remarkably little joy

Europe | Lara Marlowe

Lara Marlowe: His election has not provided any sense of resolution to French angst

Macron and Brexit: French president will take a tough line

Europe | Denis Staunton

Le Pen defeat is good news for Britain, but pro-EU Macron is unlikely to give an inch in talks

Ukraine's Ruslana: From Eurovision to revolution and back

Europe | Daniel McLaughlin

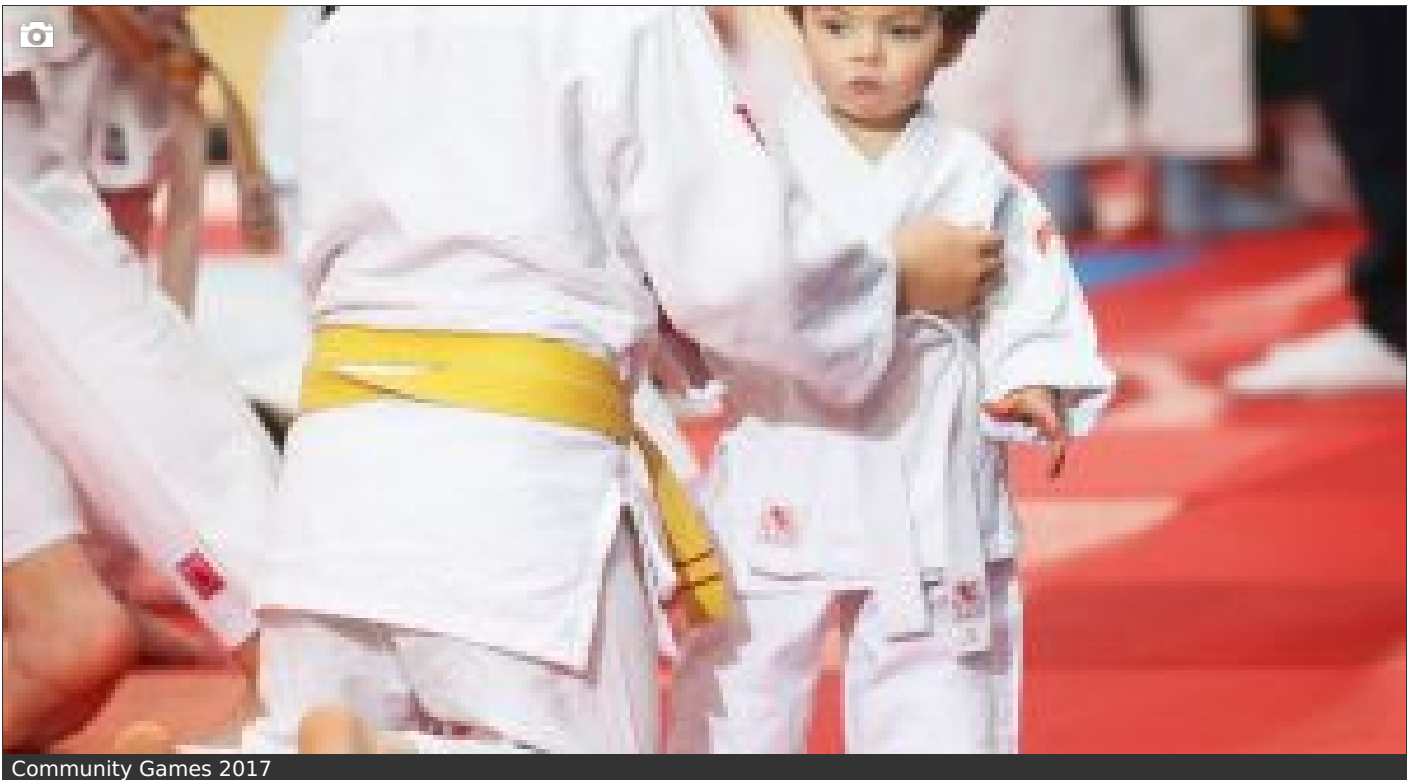

Maidan protests still inspire 2004 winner as Kiev prepares to host song contest

Galleries »

Images of the Weekend

Community Games 2017

Twitter

Tweets by @IrishTimesWorld

News - direct to your inbox

Which Daily Digest would you like?

Morning Lunchtime Both

Name

Surname

Email

SUBSCRIBE | ABOUT US |

POLICY &
TERMS

© 2017 THE IRISH TIMES