Emirates was the center of attention at the Dubai Airshow, which took place last week. The host nation's flag carrier made a $52 billion deal with Boeing (<https://www.businessinsider.com/boeing-wins-orders-worth-52-billion-emirates-dubai-air-show-2023-11>) on day one, before sparking tensions with Airbus and Rolls Royce.

Tim Clark, the airline's president, ruled out a deal for the A350-1000 (<https://www.businessinsider.com/etihads-first--airbus-a350-costs-3665-million-sustainability50-2022-4>) despite Bloomberg (<https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2023-11-15/airbus-nears-smaller-emirates-deal-to-prop-up-poor-dubai-showing#xj4y7vzkg>) reporting that Emirates previously wanted to buy 50 of them.

He said the Rolls-Royce Trent XWB-97 — the exclusive engine option for the widebody jet — is "defective" as he believes it needs to be removed for maintenance too frequently, per Reuters (<https://www.reuters.com/business/autos-transportation/rolls-royce-defends-a350-1000-engine-emirates-criticism-2023-11-14/>).

The dispute played out in public, attracting questions on Tuesday at Airbus' press conference announcing EgyptAir's order for 10 A350-900s.

Airbus' chief commercial officer, Christian Scherer, called it a "perfectly fine engine" before saying he wouldn't comment on Clark's remark and bringing the focus back to the EgyptAir deal.

Later that same day, Rolls Royce's chief customer officer commented on the record. "The engine works really well in what we call benign operations," he told Reuters. "But in sandy, hot conditions it is challenged, as all modern engines are, because the temperatures are very high."

Airbus later reached an accord with Emirates on Thursday as it announced an order for 15 of the shorter A350-900, which the airline said was worth $6 billion.

Boeing beats out Airbus in the orders battle

Boeing got off to a hot start on Monday, announcing several deals.

As well as Emirates' order for 95 jets, the American manufacturer also called press conferences with SunExpress, flyDubai, Royal Jordanian, and Royal Air Maroc.

Ethiopian Airlines and Kazakhstan's SCAT Airlines announced orders with Boeing on Tuesday.

In total, Boeing received 214 firm orders for commercial aircraft, compared to Airbus' 66.

As well as the smaller Emirates order, Airbus made deals with Ethiopian Airlines, EgyptAir, and airBaltic.

Although an Airbus spokesperson told Reuters (<https://www.reuters.com/business/aerospace-defense/airbus-agreement-reached-principle-turkish-airlines-order-2023-11-13/>) the two did reach an agreement in principle for a "significant commercial aircraft order."

Riyadh Air yet to announce narrow-body order

Riyadh Air (<https://www.businessinsider.com/saudia-arabia-establishing-new-airline-to-attract-tourists-riyadh-air-2023-3>), the Saudi airline set to take to the skies in 2025, has its sights set on a big narrow body order.

Bloomberg reported that Riyadh Air (<https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2023-11-11/riyadh-air-set-for-100-boeing-max-order-in-dubai-to-extend-fleet>) was set to order 100 Boeing MAX jets to compliment the 72 Boeing Dreamliners it provisionally ordered in March. CEO Tony Douglas said it would announce the narrow body order in the coming weeks.

Riyadh Air also unveiled its second livery — a more modest and cost-efficient white with purple accents, compared to the purple 787 that debuted at June's Paris Air Show.

But a plan to project the new livery onto the purple airliner in Dubai went awry.

Peter Bellew, the chief operating officer, said during a panel that Riyadh Air had started training its first four pilots.

The Dubai Airshow took place five weeks after the Hamas attacks against Israel on October 7, reigniting tensions in the region.

When Business Insider visited the IAI stand on the first day of the conference, it was surrounded by a red cordon, which was removed by the second.

One person at the Airshow who said they worked for IAI declined to comment when approached by CNBC (<https://twitter.com/airinsight/status/1723969082578423865>). And staff who represented the company at the previous Dubai Airshow told the outlet they didn't attend because they had been drafted into the Israel Defense Forces.

The United Arab Emirates was among the 121 countries who voted at the United Nations last month in favor of a humanitarian truce in the Israel-Hamas war.

Kyle Vogt has resigned as CEO of Cruise, General Motors' autonomous vehicle unit, as questions build about the safety of self-driving cars. (<https://www.businessinsider.com/cruise-driverless-car-robotaxi-runs-over-woman-san-francisco-2023-10>)

Vogt's decision to step down, announced late Sunday, follows a recent recall of all 950 Cruise vehicles to update software after one of them dragged a pedestrian to the side of a San Francisco street in early October. The California Department of Motor Vehicles revoked the license for Cruise.

The company earlier announced it had paused operations for a review by independent experts. (<https://www.businessinsider.com/california-dmv-robo-taxo-permits-unreasonable-risk-to-public-safety-2023-10>)

"The results of our ongoing reviews will inform additional next steps as we work to build a better Cruise centered around safety, transparency and trust," the company said in a statement. "We will continue to advance AV technology in service of our mission to make transportation safer, cleaner and more accessible."

Cruise won approval to transport fare-paying passengers last year. Since then, the autonomous vehicles have drawn complaints for making unexpected, traffic-clogging stops that critics say threaten to inconvenience other travelers and imperil public safety.

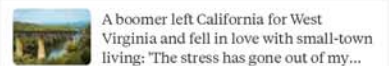

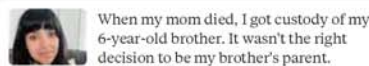

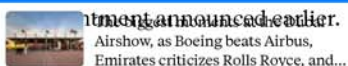

Advertisement

Late last year, U.S. safety regulators said they were investigating reports that autonomous robotaxis run by Cruise can stop too quickly or unexpectedly quit moving, potentially stranding passengers.

Problems at Cruise could slow the deployment of fully autonomous vehicles that carry passengers without human drivers on board. It also could bring stronger federal regulation of the vehicles, which are carrying passengers in more cities nationwide.

Cruise had been testing 300 robotaxis during the day when it could only give rides for free, and 100 robotaxis at night when it was allowed to charge for rides in less congested parts of San Francisco. Vogt earlier said most collisions were caused by inattentive or impaired human drivers, not the AVs.

Cruise's statement said its board had accepted Vogt's resignation. Mo Elshenawy, Cruise's executive vice president of engineering, will become president and chief technology officer. It said Craig Glidden also will serve as president and continue as chief administrative officer for Cruise, an GM acquired a majority stake in Cruise when it was a startup in 2016. The company invested to take 80% stake in the company in May 2021.

Vogt attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and was a co-founder of Twitch, an interactive livestreaming service for content including gaming, entertainment, sports and music. Amazon acquired Twitch for about $1 billion in 2014.

- My mom died when I was 27, leaving me to take care of my 6-year-old brother.
- When my baby was 4 months old, my then-husband left me to be a single mom.

Sometimes the phrases our parents recite often have a way of sticking with you, both good and bad.

For me, it was my mother saying, "I'm not worried about you." For a long time, I interpreted that sentiment as a trust in my ability to succeed (<https://www.insider.com/how-to-succeed-according-to-psychologists-2017-4>), but as I grew, I realized it held a lot more weight. What it actually meant was, "I know you can handle everything on your own, and you are so good at it that I will ask you to take on more than you should."

collapse-2022-8) she had traveled to get (<https://www.insider.com/woman-who-traveled-mexico-for-surgery-opens-up-about-complications-2023-3>). While I took care of her and all of her finances and responsibilities, my biggest challenge was my then-6-year-old brother.

I felt pressured to take care of him

"If something happens to your mom, and you're not prepared to take Alex, I would be happy to," his godmother told me.

I'll admit, I contemplated this. I felt like I had a lot more life to live before settling down with kids. Then, everyone, including my partner at the time, began with the pressure. I would get asked things like, "You're going to take him, right? I mean, you have to take him."

Pretty soon, I had friends, distant family, and even acquaintances boldly calling me to counsel me on what I should do next. I was overwhelmed, I was grieving, and, most of all, I was drained.

I got married quickly because I thought I'd have a better chance at getting custody in court.

Over the next two years, I embraced motherhood, but good deeds don't always end up as a happily ever after. It turns out that my brother and I were like oil and water — we simply didn't mix. We tried everything: every therapist, activities, changes in school, sports, etc. Nothing helped us create the bond he was looking for when our mother died.

It resulted in a lot of individual therapy for me, and for that, I'm grateful.

After a few years of the life I created, my husband left me with my brother and our then-4-month-old baby.

I finally started saying no to people

I spent another two years being a single mom to both as best as I could. Within that time, my aunt died, leaving behind three kids, two of whom were under 18.

When my mom died, I got custody of my 6-year-old brother. It wasn't the right decision to be my brother's parent.

A boomer left California for West Virginia and fell in love with small-town living: "The stress has gone out of my..."

I was living this strange déjà vu, as I again started to be asked, "You're going to take them, right? I mean, you have to take them."

For the first time in my life, I responded, "Actually, I don't."

From this moment on, I began to emphatically tell everyone, even those who depended on me, no. When I did this, I released a lot of responsibility that wasn't mine to bear, and I could finally exhale.

It wasn't a good decision to parent my brother

After four years with my brother, we both decided we needed to be honest with ourselves. We weren't happy living together. Throughout the years, he had maintained his bond with his godmother and would often ask me whether he could live with her. Out of pride and the fear of giving up, I'd say no and try harder to make it work. Then I surrendered to my reality: He was happier with her.

He has spent the past two years with her and is the happiest I have ever seen him, and I was given the space to be his sister again.

I was born into a role that asked me to hold the world on my shoulders because I was strong. It trained me to believe that my power of will meant it was my duty to take on more, so I did.

But we're allowed to change our minds and pivot.

I learned that when I put myself first, everyone who mattered supported it. I spent a lot of time worrying about what others would say if I stepped down as the matriarch. But what happened was that my sibling, close friends, and even my therapists all said the same thing: I had done more than enough, and they were all proud of me.

- The cost of living is much lower and it's much more peaceful, though there's a lot less going on.

Jan Pfrimmer, 72, has lived all over the place. She traveled the US as a flying trapeze artist, lived in Mexico City for a year, dealt cards in Reno and Tahoe, and lived in a city just outside of San Diego for a decade where she worked as an accountant.

Pfrimmer, who has spent the majority of her life in California, was ready for another move. This time, to a small town of 1,500 residents in West Virginia (<https://www.businessinsider.com/i-moved-to-a-small-town-in-west-virginia-to-escape-big-city-life-2023-4>) called Shepherdstown.

Virginia in May to be closer to her family and to get away from the rather pricey hustle and bustle of California.

"It's cool to be able to slow down and really enjoy the stuff that money can't buy like the trees turning colors, or the leaves and bird songs," Pfrimmer said. "The stress has gone out of my life, and I think everybody in California pretty much lives with a certain amount of stress since it's fast-paced. There's no getting around it."

West Virginia is not a particularly popular destination for former Californians. Of the approximately 818,000 former Californians (<https://www.businessinsider.com/california-texas-moving-arizona-florida-expensive-housing-costs-washington-nevada-2023-10>) who moved to other states from 2021 to 2022, just 879 moved to West Virginia. On the flip side, just 42 former West Virginians moved to California.

Many Californians have been leaving for states including Texas (<https://www.businessinsider.com/moving-from-california-to-texas-pros-cons-silicon-valley-boerne-2023-11>), Tennessee (<https://www.businessinsider.com/moving-from-california-to-tennessee-pros-cons-san-diego-murfreesboro-2023-11>), and Kentucky (<https://www.businessinsider.com/moving-from-california-to-kentucky-pros-cons-san-diego-paducah-2023-11>) in search of a lower cost of living, better weather, and a slower pace of life. Still, some residents in areas where many out-of-staters are moving have been priced out and thus have to look to other states.

'There's nothing left for me there'

Pfrimmer said she didn't want to stay in California (<https://www.businessinsider.com/moving-to-texas-california-florida-new-york-housing-expensive-2023-10>) anymore, but she wasn't quite sure what her next move would be.

"It was just very expensive to live there, I don't know how people do it," Pfrimmer said. "I think they have to sometimes choose between paying their electric bill and getting food."

She said for years she's contemplated leaving because of wildfires, especially as more and more home insurers are pulling out of her area of California. Her commute at her accounting job, she said, was sometimes an hour or two each way.

"Until you've had a fire come down into almost your backyard, you have no idea how scary that is," Pfrimmer said.

Overall, though, the weather (<https://www.businessinsider.com/moving-from-florida-to-california-pros-cons-los-angeles-orlando-2023-11>) and nature kept her glued to California. She lived 20 minutes away from the coast, and she said within two hours, she could drive to a desert or snow. But this alone wasn't enough to stop her from moving, especially as she came to view the people in California as not very friendly and with different approaches to life than her.

"People are just striving for more money, more of this, more of that, and it kind of gets out there into the universe, at least in California," she said. "I'm finding in West Virginia it's just everybody's been wonderful, and it's slower, and I can breathe."

Weighing the pros and cons

Pfrimmer's move from California to West Virginia was so smooth she suspected it may be "preordained." The moving team was thorough, she found a home that fit her wants, and she rather quickly acclimated to the new community.

The cost of living is much lower in Shepherdstown, from taxes to utility bills. She sold her 1,200-square-foot California home for $630,000 that she bought for $151,000. She said it later sold for nearly $900,000 a month and a half later. In West Virginia, she bought a 1,700-square-foot townhouse for $285,000, and she installed a new roof for only $5,000.

The median listing price for a home in Shepherdstown is $572,500, whereas it's $747,400 in Santee, the San Diego suburb where she previously lived, according to Realtor.com estimates (https://www.realtor.com/realestateandhomes-search/Santee_CA/overview).

She said car insurance, registration costs, and taxes are also considerably less. She estimates she's paying around a quarter of what she paid in California for monthly expenses.

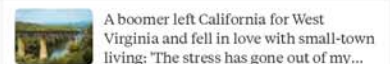

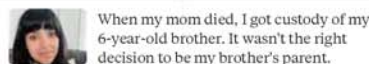

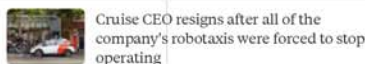

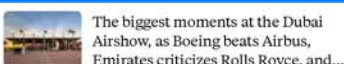

She said she likes how Shepherdstown is a university town (<https://www.shepherd.edu/>) with younger, more liberal students. Still, there's less variety for shops and restaurants, and she said the quality of produce is worse.

Additionally, she said the healthcare she receives in West Virginia is better than in California — she said in West Virginia, medical facilities often respond within minutes to emails and have short wait times, whereas in California, facilities have many more patients.

Still, public transportation in her area is scarce, although everything she needs is located less than five miles away. She also said living in such a small town can sometimes get a little too quiet.

"If I were in my 20s, this probably wouldn't be the place for me because you'd want to have access to concerts and places to go dancing, see a movie and plays, and there isn't a lot of that happening here," Pfrimmer said.

Ultimately, for Pfrimmer, the simple parts of life in West Virginia are the most poignant.

"I find the sound of the trains going through town comforting, I don't know why," Pfrimmer said. "I find something everyday in nature out here, and that brings me a great deal of joy."
