The last leased aircraft was delivered to China back in 2021, but no Boeing 787s had been handed over directly by the planemaker since 2019.

It is understood of the 60 787 aircraft that are in the inventory, 12 of them are destined for airlines in China at the moment, as per Channel News Asia.

Such a milestone is reflective of additional clearances being made by the CAAC, which now also includes the handover and delivery of the 737 MAX aircraft.

However, it is understood such deliveries will continue to be approved individually by the China-based regulator.

All eyes will be on how this develops, as relationships between the U.S & China continue to develop.
