Bypassing sanctions*Iran orders five Boeing 777-200ERs

TEHRAN – US sanctions have barred Iran from the international aircraft market. Nevertheless, the regime in Tehran is still able to bring used jets into the country through indirect means – most recently five Boeing 777-200ERs.

Iran has once again secured aircraft bypassing US sanctions. As reported by "Air Insight," Mahan Air can expect five Boeing 777-200ERs.

The aircraft share a common history – between 2001 and 2003, the five entered service with Singapore Airlines, and one 777-200ER was later transferred to its low-cost subsidiary Scoot. After being retired from Singapore Airlines, the 777-200ERs continued to fly with NokScoot.

Since 2019, the aircraft's trace has been lost – during the pandemic, the aircraft were mostly stored in Alice Springs, Australia. From there, a US broker first transferred the five 777-200ERs to Lanzhou, China. The aircraft reappeared in Siem Reap, Cambodia, at the beginning of July 2025.

During the transfer to Iran through the airspace of Pakistan and Afghanistan, the aircraft were registered in Madagascar as 5R-HER, 5R-IJA, 5R-ISA, 5R-RIJ, and 5R-RIS. According to Iranian media, the country is expecting six more 777s. Mahan Air has already achieved coups in acquiring aircraft in the past – the airline brought four A340-300s

, former Turkish Airlines aircraft, from South Africa to Tehran in 2022. A former French presidential jet, an A340-200, also made its way to Iran via a detour.
